'The Grandmother' is a poem by Ray Young Bear, an American-Indian poet. In the poem, we simply get to know that the poet has a memory of his grandmother who has long been dead. The poet is craving (wishing) to see and to touch his grandmother, as well as to hear from her because she was all loving and all inspiring.

Grandmother Summary | Questions Answers With PDF File
I found my grandmother dead. It shook me up. I got up to make her breakfast, and I knew it was strange that she wasn't stirring. I went in to wake her, and she was laying in rigor mortis, and I'm done. I called next door, and the kid picked up the phone, and I was so wild, he dropped it. Votes: 1. Gil Scott-Heron
