Most music teachers and performers, however, are at least partly self-employed, and this income needs to be filed on a Schedule C form, where you can list your income, your assets (such as CD inventory), and your expenses, which end up being deducted from your income before it is reported on Form 1040 to calculate your taxes. The bottom line is also reported on your self-employment tax, which is often the larger portion of your tax.

You can buy a more powerful bookkeeping program, but it will probably be overkill, much more expensive, and significantly harder to learn. Music Teacher's Secretary is a small but efficient software package, perfectly suited to the needs of the private music teacher with a small to medium-sized studio. It will allow music teachers to spend less time on tedious financial tasks, and more time on what they do and like best: teaching music!
