Separation and contrast are some of Lahiri's principal thematic threads in "When Mr. Pirzada Came to Dine." First, the difference between the ways adults and children perceive the world receives major emphasis in the story. The narrator Lilia, 10 years old, cannot understand why Mr. Pirzada "is no longer considered Indian," as her father remarks. After all, he is Bengali, and he shares the same sense of humor, the same food, and many of the same customs with her family.
